

NEW JERSEY'S CONGRESSMEN

BREAKFAST BEFORE BILLIARDS.

DEMOCRATIC PROSPECTS IN THE DIFFERENT DISTRICTS.

HOBSON Spending his 10-Gotten Money.—RILEY's Honest Eight—A Close Fight in the Second and Fifth—The Probabilities.

TRENTON, Oct. 30.—Looking over the New Jersey Congress districts, it is seems clear that while at least three of the seven are reasonably certain to be carried by the Democrats, the rest, in each of the other four is doubtful. Senator Hobson carried the First District, which was intended to be the strongest Republican district in the State, by a mere plurality in 1878. The combined Democratic and Greenback vote showed a majority of over 1,100 in the district, which is composed of five strongly Republican counties, Camden, Cape May, Cumberland, Gloucester and Salem, against the notorious power of the navy. It was at first understood that the Democrats and Greenbacks would unite on a candidate, and the Greenbacks nominated a Democrat in good faith upon that understanding; but Hobson's money was instrumental in securing a straight Democratic nomination afterward, and such was the popular indignation against the corrupt deal that the Greenback got 3,600 more votes than the Democrat. This year Mr. Joseph Carter has been nominated by the Democrats, and Charles J. Hollis by the Greenbacks. The Greenback vote is expected to be light, and Hobson, handicapped with reputation which gets worse as it grows older, is disgracing much of his ill-gotten gain in order to win.

In the Second District, comprising Republican Atlantic and Ocean, with the doubtful counties of Burlington and Mercer, Hezekiah D. Smith of Smithville, in Burlington County, has been recommended by the Democrats as their candidate. Mr. Hart Breuer, a Trenton paper, Mr. Smith was nominated, but he is a man of indomitable pluck, and returning again to the charge, he was elected. His two contests have made him thoroughly familiar with the country, and in making the most of the tariff question in Trenton and Burlington City, Mr. Smith is a good speaker and manufacturer, and will probably do well. Moreover, he is a tool-potter, whom the Democrats have nominated for Senator, will probably be able to save the workingmen from Republican scroffs. He had held office in the Legislature from 1873 to 1878, there being a Prohibitionist in the field; but then he had the Greenback endorsement also. This year the Greenbacks have nominated Mr. Hart Breuer, who, like a Republican candidate, was strong enough to defeat Mr. Smith, when he first made the race. Uncle Sammy is in his class. The district may be set down as doubtful, with the chances in favor of the Republicans.

In the Third District, Middlesex, Monmouth, and Union counties, the renomination of Mr. Miles Ross for a fourth term was considered equivalent to an election. Mr. Ross was elected in 1878 by a plurality of over 4,000, and over-ex-congressman Clark, a much better known man and a shrewd manager than Mr. Ross' present antagonist, Mr. Hobson, had nothing to offer. Hobson, however, was nominated in Monmouth county, and may slightly reduce the Democratic vote. Mr. Hobson, of Newington L. H. Hobson, who got 3,843 votes in 1878, has been nominated again by the Greenbacks.

In the Fourth District, the counties of Hunterdon, Morris, and Sussex, Mr. H. S. Harris, the Prosecutor of the Peace, was so successful in breaking up the Warren County ring, that the Democratic nominating convention, after the Republican managers withdrew from the canvass for Governor at the eleventh hour, was won to nominate him. He is a man of some note, and the candidate for Congress in this city is an expert in Tammany Hall. In 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington. Between calls there was some irreverence. At the second board a young man, Maurice Daly, the wag, Dan Strauss, Randolph Heiser of Boston, Eugene Carter, the genial Joe Dion, the rotund; and Sam Knight, besides Mr. Hobson's brother, Leslie E. Hobson, ex-Alderman Bruce, Capt. James H. Hayne, Harry J. Hubert, and John E. Gleeson, the first card was made up by Joe Dion, and it was evident, before the company arose from the table, that he knew how to do something. The cards were in the style of chicken and oysters French, a shred of beef with mushrooms and French potatoes, a tiny lamb chop, chicken à la King, and a piece of salmon. Sauvignon and champagne were not forgotten. Mr. Dion's exquisite pronunciation of the French language enabled him to overcome the menu, and the waiter, who was present, was equally present. Mr. Hubert said that Mr. Schaefer was not in the city. If he had been he would certainly have been present at the breakfast. The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in carriages.

This was the first time this city as an expert was in Tammany Hall, in 1874, when he played with Vignaux, and was beaten by ten points. Since then his lesson has risen to the top of the billiard tables, and he is now one of the best players with no equal in Central Pacific and Headington.

The game was not explained, but the first after-toss was destined to Hobson's success. At 10 o'clock the company broke up, as there was no time to play. Hobson, who had been to live at 200 Park, was accompanied to the pier by his friends in